For those who use TIS:

With the direction for non-essential staff to not report to work continuing for Tuesday, March 24, I wanted to again reach out with information that will help you accurately record your time during the period of site planning.

“COV” time may be recorded for scheduled shifts when an employee did not have a previously planned absence (PTB/PTX/Other Absence) or overtime.

Employees who are able to telework are required to continue to do so and record time worked to TRW. Telework-capable employees whose assignments are impacted by the site declaration must coordinate with their manager to determine if alternative work assignments are directed. This must occur before the “COV” code is eligible for teleworker use.

As with any similar site status change, subcontractors and staff augmentation are not eligible to use the “COV” code. However, where remote work is allowed by contract terms and conditions or approved telework status, and supported by authorized scope, work should progress as normal.

As a reminder, employees should use COA JN09 to capture all costs associated with coronavirus (COVID-19) planning, preparation, and supply chain related activities.
